SPRING 2026

THE END OF THE EARTH

Built for Adventure. Designed for Life.

At the southern tip of Chile, Punta Arenas rests at the edge of the map - long known to explorers as the "End of the Earth."

Bars bear the names of legendary adventurers like Shackleton, with tales of Darwin's voyages echoing through the straits. Statues of the indigenous Tehuelche and Selk'nam stand tall along the streets - reflecting the region's deep cultural roots.

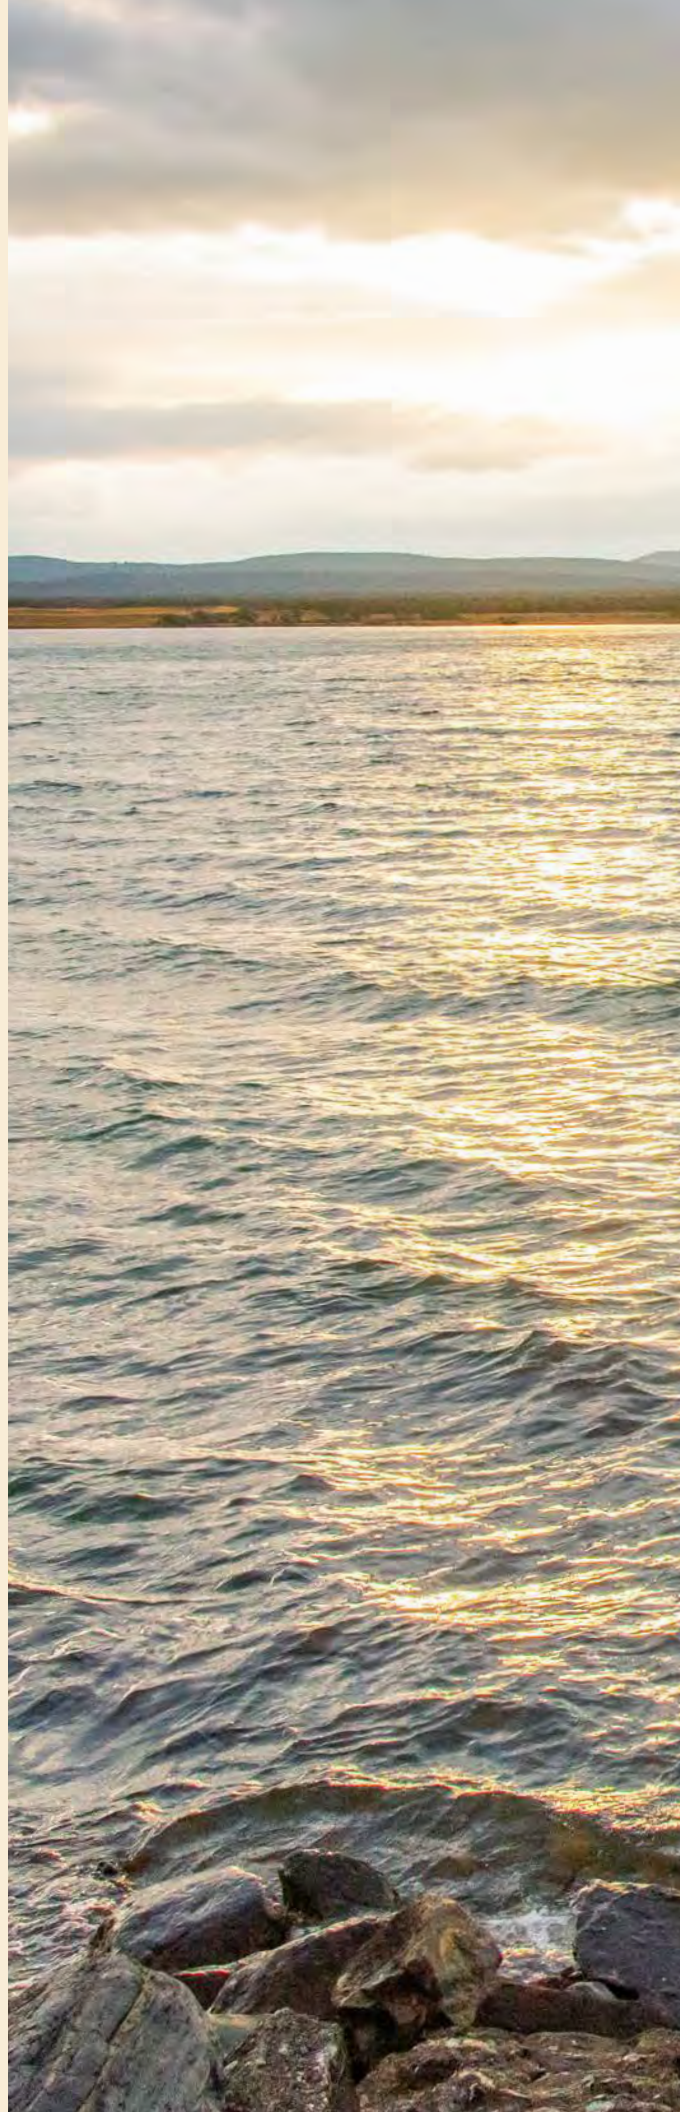

Punta Arenas thrives as both a working port and a starting point - where travelers push farther south to Antarctica, venture into Patagonia's dramatic peaks, or explore the wild coasts where penguins and seals roam.

Arriving in the unseasonably warm spring, award-winning videographer Michael Ryan Clark began his latest journey at the "End." Fully equipped in DKOTA Grizzly, he wandered mural-covered streets, relaxed in dimly lit bars decorated with ship paintings, and sipped Calafate sours under the watchful eyes of sea maps.

Michael then traveled northwest toward the jagged peaks of Patagonia; tracking pumas in the wild and capturing the untamed beauty of South America's last great wilderness. Every step of the journey reinforced the core nature of DKOTA Grizzly: timeless design, rugged utility, and gear made to go the distance.

It's in places like this - where function meets the unexpected - that DKOTA Grizzly stands out.
